Porsché Mysticque's Long Bio

Porsché Mysticque Steele is the CEO of MysticqueRose Publishing Services, TEDx speaker, and independent book publishing expert who helps coaches across the globe combine their wisdom and story to publish a highly impactful book that generates more income and influence while elevating them into thought leadership. Porsché was born and raised in Pittsburgh, PA where, as a child, she was always outspoken and energetic. Yet, by the time she reached her senior year of high school, she felt as if she lost complete control of her own life. Being coerced into giving up the dream of going to college and the freedom to socialize, date, or even pursue a dream of her own, she became trapped in a prison disguised as a home. To cope, she learned how to adapt and assimilate. Her main form of escapism was sneaking online to read memoirs, biographies, and outstanding works of fiction posted by various writers. Their stories helped her to learn about the world she was kept from.

Soon, she was having personal conversations with them, which led to her being hired as a remote freelance editor and writer for numerous books and publications. Picking up mentors along the way, she taught herself how to self-publish books, magazines, and journals with truly high quality. While working in secret, another blessing found its way into her life; a young man from Nigeria. After dating online for five years, she decided it was time to finally meet. She packed her things, snuck out of the house in the middle of the night, and never looked back. She flew to Nigeria three months later and the day she arrived, the young man proposed to her. Now, three years later, she and her husband live happily in Nigeria, transforming coaches into authors and helping them elevate their careers to become globally impactful. Porsché Mysticque is also a professional speaker that supports organizations in improving their team's productivity and company branding through the use of storytelling.
